TRIED RECIPES.

Quail Soup.

Clean quail and cut off breasts. Pound the remainder of the quail. Boil in brown bouillon for a long time. Brown butter, and pour. Stir in bouillon until smooth, strain, season with salt, cayenne and white pepper. Chop breasts and make dumplings and serve in soup.

Salmi of Game.

Cut meat from cold cooked game (any kind). Break the bones and cover with four cups of cold water and simmer. Brown two tablespoons of minced onion in four tablespoons of butter, add one tablespoon of Worcester's sauce and the liquor in which bones were cooked. Season with salt and pepper, add two cups of the cold game cut into pieces and simmer 15 minutes. Serve on slices of fried bread surrounded with a border of mashed potatoes. Garnish with parsley.

Stewed Quail.

Make a stuffing of the livers and hearts chopped fine with a little butter, chopped pork, the yolk of an egg, salt, cayenne, and a little lemon. Stuff six quail with this, put them in a stewpan, cover with soup stock, and stew gently half an hour; take out the birds and add salt, cayenne, one tablespoon of Worcester's sauce, one tablespoon of lemon juice, and tablespoon of butter, blended with two of brown flour; put back the birds for 10 minutes; toast some slices of bread, stand a bird on each and pour sauce over all.

Wild Ducks Fried.

Prepare as many ducks as you wish for a meal and cut them up as you would for a stew. Cover with cold water and let come to a boil, then pour off the water, adding a fresh supply. Boil until tender, salt and pepper to taste, then pouring off the water, fry brown in butter or drippings. The parboiling takes out the wild taste ducks usually have. This recipe may also be used for wild dove, quail, etc.

Rabbit in Ambush.

Select a plump rabbit and cut into about eight good-sized pieces. Let it stand about half an hour in salt water before cooking. Slice two good-sized onions and fry slowly in butter or olive oil, adding salt and a pinch of red pepper. Then put the rabbit into this and pour hot water on to cover, then cook for an hour. A few minutes before it is done add a small can of tomatoes which have been seasoned with sage and thyme. When the rabbit has been cooked tender place on a platter, thicken with gravy, and pour over the rabbit. Then add the ambush, which is made by cooking about half a cup of rice, dash of salt and pepper and a dozen mushrooms for about two hours. Place this around the rabbit on the extreme outside of the platter. Not only is it a dish outside the ordinary, but it is very delicious. —San Francisco Call.
